3. Copywriting Strategy & Market Differentiation

The copy structure applies specialized local restaurant conversion mechanics to differentiate a Dhaba from regular urban dining spots:

- Sensory Utensil Integration: Highlighting cooking apparatuses like clay tandoors, iron kadhais, and earthen kulhads triggers instant cultural trust and flavor associations that a digital consumer can practically smell through the screen.
- The Highway Friction Buffer: Roadside diners worry intensely about parking space, clean food, and delay. The copy strategically solves this by advertising "ample clean parking" and "rapid family seating" to drive casual drop-ins.
- Visceral Vocabulary: Replaces tired corporate adjectives like "excellent quality" or "premium dining" with grounding, appetizing terms like smoky layers, piping hot, wood embers, and heavy swirl.
